[Script Read Start]

At more than 630 yards, the 11th is the sixth longest hole on the PGA Tour.

The Aon Insight tells us that since 2018, players who find the left half of the hole on their tee shot go for the green twice as often, and are 27% more likely to make birdie or better than those on the right. The go for green difference is even more pronounced from the rough, as players are 3 times as likely to go for the green from the left rough versus the right.

The past three champions have capitalized on better decisions, hitting each of their drives to the left side of this hole and gaining more than five strokes collectively on the field here en route to their victories.
